... A Golden Beauty
... From the Heart of Texas

RILEY BOY

Any person would consider himself fortunate to own a Palomino that has been called the "most beautiful horse in Texas", especially a horse that need not depend on his beauty alone but which can perform and win in open all-color competition.

When Mr. McElroy bought Riley Boy he acquired a horse that can show and win in five-gaited events; an acclaimed rodeo performer good enough to place reserve to a seasoned collecting champion the first time he was entered, and a horse so outstanding that he is to be starred in a forthcoming motion picture featuring the famed Texas Rangers.

Mr. McElroy's daughter, Madeline, the young lady who is up in these pictures and who has shown Riley Boy so successfully in Texas shows, will double for the feminine star of the motion picture.

You will see Riley Boy again and again either in the flesh or in pictures because his beauty, intelligence and personality are too good to be fenced in even by the great State of Texas.

Palomino stallion of exquisite golden color. He is sired by Fort Concho and is out of Daisy Mae, a registered mare. Miss Madeline McElroy, who is up in this picture, has won numerous awards with Riley Boy in the stiffest competition Texas and the Southwest has to offer. They are to have an important part in the forthcoming motion picture, "The Texas Ranger."

Madeline McElroy O'Neill riding Riley Boy

Surrounded by office complexes near 8329 N MoPac, nestled against the railroad tracks, sits an old riding stable hidden from view. If you didn't know it was there you would never notice it. Indeed in 2017 the Travis County Historic Commission's (TCHC) survey of historic properties in Northwest Travis County conducted by Hicks and Company missed the building.

We know it was a riding stable because it was serendipitously "rediscovered" by someone who as a kid rode there. On a Facebook history group, other people that had spent their childhood taking riding lessons there came forward. Other people local to the neighborhood that knew about the building chimed in "We always wondered what that building was!"

Once rediscovered, and recognized as having been a riding stable, the question was what was the history? Unfortunately the people that took riding lessons there as young children didn't remember the name. Here's what we've learned thus far.

A look at aerial photographs of the area showed the stable was part of a larger ranch / farm; the building dates to at least 1940, the earliest aerials available to us. The first name we can put on the property with confidence is the O'Neill Riding Stable, 8500 Balcones Trail. That address predates MoPac, the construction of which, and later the renaming of Balcones Trail to Balcones Drive, threw street numbers off. So we relied on properties on old Balcones Trail in that area whose location we were confident of to confirm O'Neill Riding Stable at that address.

O'Neill Riding Stables shows up in newspaper advertisements in 1959, run-by Frank "Dutch" O'Neill and wife, Madeline O'Neill (deed search thus far is inconclusive as to whether they owned the property or just the business).

Here is where the story gets really interesting. Madeline was the daughter of Robert Allen (better known as R.A.) McElroy who raised Palominos. One named Riley Boy is in several "who's who" of Palominos, e.g. Official Stud Book and Registry, Palomino Horse Breeders Of America. McElroy had three daughters, one, Pat, was a "model" that moved to New York. But Madeline was into horse riding and training.

Austin's paper in 1946 proclaims "McElroy's Riley Boy To Go on Tour Of Nation Soon .. often called 'Texas' most beautiful horse,' will leave his Travis county ranch home soon on an exhibition tour that will take him pretty well over the nation, and is expected to culminate in Madison Square Garden next winter ... McElroy for the past five years [i.e. 1941] has been engaged in raising and training Palomino horses, and now has approximately 50 on his ranch northwest of Austin (italics mine). Miss McElroy is an expert rider and trainer. A picture of Miss McElroy riding the famous horse will adorn the cover of the National Palomino magazine next month."<sup>[1]</sup> In 1947 McElroy presented a framed picture of Riley Boy, with daughter Madeline riding him in a classic "Lone Ranger Hi-Ho Silver" pose, to then Governor of Texas, Beauford Jester.<sup>[2]</sup>

So was the stable at 8500 Balcones Trail part of the ranch cited in 1946 about McElroy? Another article from 1950 cites the ranch "at Fiskville"<sup>[3]</sup>; the stable is less than 2 miles from the Edward Zimmerman home on Payton Gin Rd, one of the founders of Fiskville<sup>[4]</sup>. The Balcones Trail location fits the criteria of being both northwest of Austin and near Fiskville.

We don't know if O'Neill Riding Stables was in business before 1959, but in 1960 Dutch and Madeline O'Neill sold the property (or business) and it was renamed Balcones Riding Stables.<sup>[5]</sup><sup>[6]</sup>

We know a riding stable by some name was here until MoPac was constructed from talking with people who as children rode here, and from one of the last owner's daughter. If you have information about the stables, would love to hear from you!
